Dear descendants,

It is, undoubtedly, hard to predict the way the moral compass will turn in 100 years, but I would like you to know that some things, such as some historical objects, should be reserved, in my humble opinion, whatever it takes.

First of all, living in Russia and giving this country all the appreciation it deserves, I would like to emphasize ~~its~~^{the} significance of the Kremlin, which is situated in Moscow, as a cultural and historic building. It used to be a residence of Russian monarchs at first and it always has had a great impact on Russian cultural life and history.

Secondly, Empire State Building in New York seems to be one of the greatest contemporary buildings. It has always mesmerised people seeing it by its magnificent size and grace.

Thirdly, the Buckingham Palace in London is one of the most popular places in Britain, not available for ~~visiting~~ visiting, though, but catching public's attention.

All of these buildings has had a significant impact on many generations and it would be nice if the next generation saw them too, as it really is worth visiting and, therefore, ^{should be reserved} ~~is~~ ~~reservation~~. ~~Even if ~~if everything~~ Unfortunatly~~ Unfortunatly, some people cannot see the beauty of these places at present, but ~~it~~ also worth maybe ~~the next~~ future generations will be cleverer than the previous ones.
