Dear descendants,

I'm writing to you in order to pay your attention to several things I find the most important for the humanity at present, in ^{the} past and in the future as well, but which are, unfortunately, disappearing through years.

First of all, people nowadays are becoming less attentive to each other. This can lead to a lot of ~~different~~ difficulties so I think the problem must be tackled as fast as it can be. Another significant thing I should tell you about is people's attitude to the environment. Of course, numerous campaigns and communities fighting for the nature conservation are appearing but they can't find solutions to the problem of people being irresponsible for what they do. And last but not least, our society now ~~sets~~ relies on developing technologies mostly. There's nothing wrong with using innovations and so on, however, people should appreciate those things, which differ us from computers, more, actually. Our history, art and simply communication between people - that's what should stay unchanged through decades and what can't be replaced by any technologies, isn't it?

To sum up, your past is a part of your lives and you should learn from our mistakes so that you don't make them.

That's all I wanted to say.
