Not only does this phrase appear in the text as spoken by Nathalie, it also sums up the story: the conflict got resolved after Nathalie spoke to Brantain, letting it earn the title "little", and the main focus of the story was the conflict that spurred from the encounter with Harry.

ТВОРЧЕСКОЕ ЗАДАНИЕ

Even though it does sound intriguing to try and contact alien life, ultimately, I believe that it is unnecessary to do so, and it will cause more harm than good.

The main reason is that trying to contact other planets is extremely expensive. On Earth, we have to pay each time we send messages accross distance via sms. Compared to the vast expanse of space where planets are countless lightyears apart, this distance we text over is tiny, so imagine how costly it would be to communicate back and forth like this. Plus, a team of scientists will need to be hired for a mission that may not even yield a result. Millions, maybe even billions will need to be spent to provide these scientists with wages and equipment. Some taxpayers will also protest their money being wasted on such insignificant things.

The second reason, though hypothetical, is still needed to be considered. Say, we do establish contact with other intelligent life forms. But will this be a good or bad thing? These life forms could be set on dominion, causing them to destroy us and our planet, or make us their prisoners. Judging by past wars and human conflicts, I can say that humanity cannot even handle itself, so do we really ~~we~~ want a whole new civilization to deal with?
