ТВОРЧЕСКОЕ ЗАДАНИЕ

There is absolutely no evidence of any intelligent life forms except humans, so should we send signals in attempt to reach the answer from aliens? There are a lot of opinions on what aliens might actually be.

Let's imagine that they are less advanced and intelligent than humans. In that case, if we look at this on the scale of time in universe and compare it to the fact that less than 200 years passed since humans first learned to transmit signals, we get the result of unimaginably tiny chance of receiving the answer. If we are smarter, then sending signals is not worth trying.

In the situation that we are on approximately the same level as aliens we could receive some information from them and actually it might be beneficial. Unfortunately, the chance of finding any intelligent species apart from us multiplied by the chance of them being the same developed as us makes this situation literally impossible.

In the last possible situation, where aliens are more advanced and intelligent than us we could remember about the scale of time and conclude that if they are smarter, then they are a lot smarter and will definitely find humanity faster than humanity will find them, thus in that case sending signals is not worth it!

All in all, the only beneficial case where we should send signals is if we and aliens are on the same level, but the chance of that is incomprehensibly close to zero.
