Deficit of food has been an issue for humans throughout our entire existence. In the last decades, however, the problem gradually perished in developed countries. Hunger still exists in some countries, though, for several reasons.

Firstly, what causes hunger is overpopulation. That's why India and Africa suffer from hunger the most. Secondly, lack of provision is caused by social disparity. For instance, some Indians enjoy life and abundance, while ^{people of} the lower classes are malnourished. War and Lastly, war and violence may cause hunger. People from Palestine, Iraq and Afghanistan suffer terribly from this.

It is clear that hunger is a vital and widespread issue nowadays. Can it be solved or diminished, though? Unfortunately, nor overpopulation, neither ^{detrimental} political regimes can be changed. Therefore, the problem requires a different approach. For instance, the ^{most} prosperous countries should provide the victims of hunger with humanitarian support. Also, social programmes should be conducted so as to support refugees from countries which are affected by war or overpopulation. This way, the amount of people who lack access to sufficient food will decrease.

To sum up, hunger can be caused by several factors nowadays. Lack of food is a serious issue which affects huge areas of the Earth.
