Excessive food waste is a major problem in the capitalist world we all live in right now. Let's take a closer look on its roots and possible ways to tackle it. The main reason why people tend to waste food is not complicated: they simply buy more than they ^{can} actually ~~need~~ ^{eat}. Behind that stand the sellers who aim at earning as much money as possible and, therefore, promoting their products to be sold in larger amounts. Because of ~~such~~ this aggressive marketing people buy more food than they actually need and ~~the rest~~ a great part of it goes to waste instead of being consumed.

Understanding the issue ~~is~~ makes it easier to confront it. In our case, the best possible solution is to become more mindful about the process of purchasing food. Not falling for attractive marketing is the key to a significant decrease of food waste. If people focus on buying the products they are able to consume will reduce the amount of food that ends up being thrown away.

To sum up, food waste is ~~an~~ significant ^{problem} yet ^{it is} not impossible to be solved. Mindful consumption is the best and most effective way to counter all the possible negative consequences of throwing away too much food.
