ВАРИАНТ № 1

It is known that the humanity is currently faced with a very serious problem — in some parts of the world there is not enough food for everyone. This problem has been studied and people have come to some conclusions.

Firstly, some countries ~~for example, in Africa~~ are way too small and don't have enough space to provide for themselves. Or maybe in remote areas the people are simply left to survive on their own.

Secondly, in some countries there might be a lot of land but very little of it is suitable to grow plants or herd animals. It can also lead to a scarcity of food in the area.

However, I have come up with a few possible solutions for the ~~problem~~ problem stated above. For example, such things as farms that have multiple levels is a great idea. ~~They take up~~ ~~part of~~ ~~much~~ space but allows ~~to grow more~~. They take just as much space but they allow to grow more plants.

What is more, ~~we~~ we can use our scientific progress to make farms produce more while using the same amount of resources. For instance, we can ~~invent~~ invent new fertilizers or genetically modify the seeds to get bigger harvests.

To conclude, of course the problem of the lack of food for everybody is no topic to joke about. But I think with our level of progress this problem is solvable.

20	Title - A Nurse's Pacific Paradise. The main hero of the story, Rebecca, is a nurse. The story shows us a very vivid picture of her life on an island in the south Pacific, specifically focusing on describing the scenery surrounding her. The lagoon she swims in is called her "particular sanctuary", so I find it fitting to call it her "Paradise".
