ВАРИАНТ № 2

Food waste is a serious environmental problem, but it often gets ignored, or it does not get the right recognition. It needs to be solved. Our ignorance can lead to serious consequences.

In my opinion, a great part of the problem lies within the marketing strategies that are practiced. Because of deals such as 'Buy one, get one free' a lot of food is wasted. Most of the time, the customer does not need more than one item, but the offer is too good to ignore. If such practices are stopped, much less food will be wasted as a result.

Another way of ~~solving~~ reducing food waste is giving this issue more recognition through mass media. Most people have access to it, so making commercials and posts about the danger of food waste can help getting the point across. Advertising can make a massive impact and give this problem the right recognition.

To conclude, I firmly believe that food should not be wasted and that this issue is unfairly brushed off and forgotten about. When we think about climate change, we tend to forget about smaller problems such as food waste. By recognising this issue, we can start turning the tide of the battle for our and our planet's survival.
