ВАРИАНТ № 1

One of the most dire problems that the world is facing right now is food shortage. Even in the 21st century there are still some parts of the world where people are starving.

Now, what may be the cause of such an issue? To my mind, the main reason lies in the fact that a large percentage of land on our planet simply cannot be used for growing crops anymore. We have exhausted the Earth's ~~own~~ resource potential by taking too much and not giving anything in return. Not only this, but we are poisoning and slowly killing the land that feeds us by dumping toxic wastes into bodies of water and destroying the ecosystem. Consequently, the land that used to provide ~~us~~ ^{the world} with a surplus of crops now can hardly feed a single country.

To tackle this issue, we must stop destroying our planet. Firstly, governments ~~must~~ of all nations must pass laws prohibiting the exploitation of a certain area of land for more than two years in a row, thus preventing soil exhaustion. Secondly, companies should be punished more severely for even a minor violations of the laws concerning ecology.

In conclusion, I strongly believe that not all hope is gone. If we take the necessary measures, we will improve the current food situation in the world.

20	I think the appropriate little title for the story would be "Healing relaxation". I think so because because for the most part, the text describes Rebecca's time at the lagoon, where she can forget about the fractious woman she has to take care of, rest her mind and soul, and simply enjoy herself.
