It is known that even in the modern world there is not enough food for everyone. The reason is simple — some parts of the world are poorer than others. While some people are driving their electrical vehicles and drinking over-priced coffee, others suffer from drudgery and bad working conditions. There are many people on ^{the planet} ~~Earth~~ that are called cheap workers working for food, which is not enough ^{for them}. Capitalism can be considered one of the global problems for our world, where humanism is not the main value. In my opinion, famine is a complicated problem that requires a world-wide considering. It is advisable that big corporations provide more opportunities for their employees. They also should pay fairly ~~less~~ and hire more workers. Not only will this decision make lives of many people better, this will benefit the corporations too. This is what Henry Ford did. He provided his employees with a decent salary and comfortable working conditions. As the result, the workers were much more productive and motivated than those who worked for other companies. For the sake of the justice, people should put out individualism and start thinking about others. You are eating oysters when others are hungry without bread.
