Well, the lack of food in many parts of the world is, undoubtedly, a very serious economical and social problem. World's hunger may cause terrible consequences, such as numerous deaths in poor countries.

Speaking of the reasons of this problem, I think that climate conditions may lead to such situations. Apart from that, the government plays a significant role in providing people with food. The lack of schools and educational programs is also a thing to mention. Poorly educated person doesn't take part in country's economics, but still needs food to continue living. In some African countries the poverty level is very high, and it has a terrible affect on an average amount of food per one person.

To my mind, the government should fight the hunger and poverty by building new schools and creating more working places for people. They should seek for help among the other countries and ask for some food supplies.

In conclusion, I would like to say that such problem as the lack of food in different countries can not be ignored. Rich countries should help poor ones with all the necessary resources. The only way of solving the problem of the world's hunger is doing everything we are capable of to share the resources.

20	Suggested title: "The Island of Hope" I chose this title because I thought it describes perfectly the situation that we can see in the text. Adele St. Cloud was a physically weak woman living a very difficult life. Her disease made her leave England and search for a new life in a place with Pacific climate.
