ВАРИАНТ № 1

Lack of food is a serious problem for many countries. For example, in some parts of Africa it is too hot to grow plants, the soil is bad and dry. There are many projects that aim to make the soil there appropriate for growing something. We can ~~not~~ use water to do it, but there is another problem - lack of water resources in Africa. To solve this problem, we can use underground water in places that have a large amount of underground rivers and lakes. In other places we can use special plants to remove salt from sea water and use this water in gardening. This way, we will ~~be able to~~ make the soil better and will be able to grow more plants for food, providing starving people with it.

Talking about Asia - it is another place in the world where malnutrition is a serious problem. Too many people live there and it is hard to provide all of them with food. This problem is manageable, because there are a lot of types of modified plants. The harvest from them is very big, it can be 3-4 times bigger than the harvest from the regular ones. The rice is a traditional food there, so if we grow modified rice there, the problem of malnutrition will be solved, ~~because Asia has good soils for growing plants, so modified types of them will grow fastly there.~~
