In order to reduce the amount of the thrown-away food we need to address all of the parts of the food-supply chain. ~~It~~ It all starts with the producer - farmer. He grows the amount of food necessary for him to make enough profit and satisfy the retailer's demands. Though the production process can go wrong when something unexpected happens. For example, the global pandemic led to a drastic increase in the production waste since no one was buying food from the farmers. For that reason the society needs to manage the ~~am~~ required number of crops to reduce the waste. Also a lot can be done by the retailing companies (like supermarket chains and restaurants). A lot of "damaged" food is thrown away simply because it does not sell that well. So to solve this problem we need to pick this kind of food and distribute them for a better use or give away for free. For instance, people can use this food on farms to feed animals or to fertilize soils. Another waste issue comes from the overconsumption of foods. People experience greater levels of hunger due to hormonal dysregulations caused by the metabolic syndrome. Our healthcare system should combine its efforts of fighting, for example, ~~diabe~~ cardiovascular disease with the food-supplier and big production companies. By improving the health of an individual we can fight the food waste problem since everyone will be eating as much as they need.
