Nowadays, people seem to be not as concerned in the problem of food waste as they should be. Every day we throw away an enormous amount of food. If we saved ~~at least~~ ^{at least} the part of it, it would be enough to feed homeless and shelter animals or to share this food with other people.

In my opinion, the most part of wasted food consists of tiny food pieces that are left after eating or thrown away with the package. People often overestimate their hunger and order big dishes in restaurants, which they can't eat till the end.

Also, food that gets out of quality easily, such as dairy products or meat, is likely to be wasted more than other products, if not kept in required conditions.

To reduce the amount of food we throw away, we should change our approach towards it and become more ^{conscious} ~~conscious~~ and responsible. The dishes that are served in restaurants don't have to be massive if they are nutritious enough to be eaten in smaller portions. Moreover, we should popularize the recycling of products to ~~save~~ reduce food waste and keep stable economics by saving our resources.

It's very important to deal with this ^{global} ~~problem~~, ~~as it is global~~. The more people become aware of it, the easier it will be to implement the ^a new food culture.

20	The title: Final meeting. This title fits the story, as the story tells about a doctor and her daughter, who spent every evening on the station waiting for their relative. Their meeting was full of tender and silent excitement. It was a very important day for them and for Juan Ramos, who never stopped believing in love.
