ВАРИАНТ № 2

In this day and age, egregious levels of food wastage are increasingly coming to the fore. Little do we know that excessive food disposal might harm our environment as well. The burning question is 'Why do people waste food?'

I am a firm believer that people in ^{our} permissive society are so ignorant about waste-free food consumption on account of ~~an~~ almost unrestricted amount of products in stock. How can we be mindful of something we enjoy in abundance? Miserably few people spare a thought whether to buy an extra pack of yoghurt while doing shopping or not. Basically, it is just simpler to put into your cart more than you will need; they abide by the ~~maxi~~ motto "the more - the better" regardless of ~~appalling~~ ~~appalling~~ appalling quantities of food ending its way in a trash bin.

Admittedly, the situation ~~is~~ is deplorable. However, there are several measures which would limit undesirable wastage of food. The most stringent one is controlling the monthly ~~of~~ food garbage weight of each family by special ~~services~~ ~~municipal~~ municipal services and, in case of exceeding the set number of kilograms, fine the breachers. The more concessive means is to light ~~this~~ this pressing ~~at~~ problem on media, ~~that~~ that is, to educate the population to be ^{shed} ^{on} more ~~conscious~~ ^{conscious} about how ^{many} ~~much~~ food products they purchase, how much they actually consume and the amount they throw away.

In conclusion, ~~combating~~ combating the rising piles of ~~untouched~~ ~~untouched~~ untouched food humans tend to get rid of is a decidedly challenging issue. I deem, that ~~if~~ only if concerted efforts are put into this matter, will it be possible to make a ~~breakthrough~~ ~~breakthrough~~ promising breakthrough.
