It is a no brainer that lack of food is a problem with which people get stuck in different parts of the world.

Some find it increasingly awkward due to the ~~thousands~~ hundreds of factories normally located in the countries, ~~for the sufficient~~ which in turn should ensure sufficient production of food products. However, the problem is that the population is growing rapidly, whereas producers don't have enough time to satisfy all peoples' needs. No less pivotal is the constant depletion of natural resources, which ~~actually leads to that~~ speeds up the process of them being wiped out completely. Ultimately, this leads to the fact that lots of people have to fight for the food and suffer from starvation.

One way of solving this problem is to use natural resources ~~relatively~~ wisely by reducing the amount of them being taken. ~~This~~ This brings us to the fact that food should be sold in the shops in preplanned quantities, so as to economize resources and at the same time give more people an opportunity to buy food.

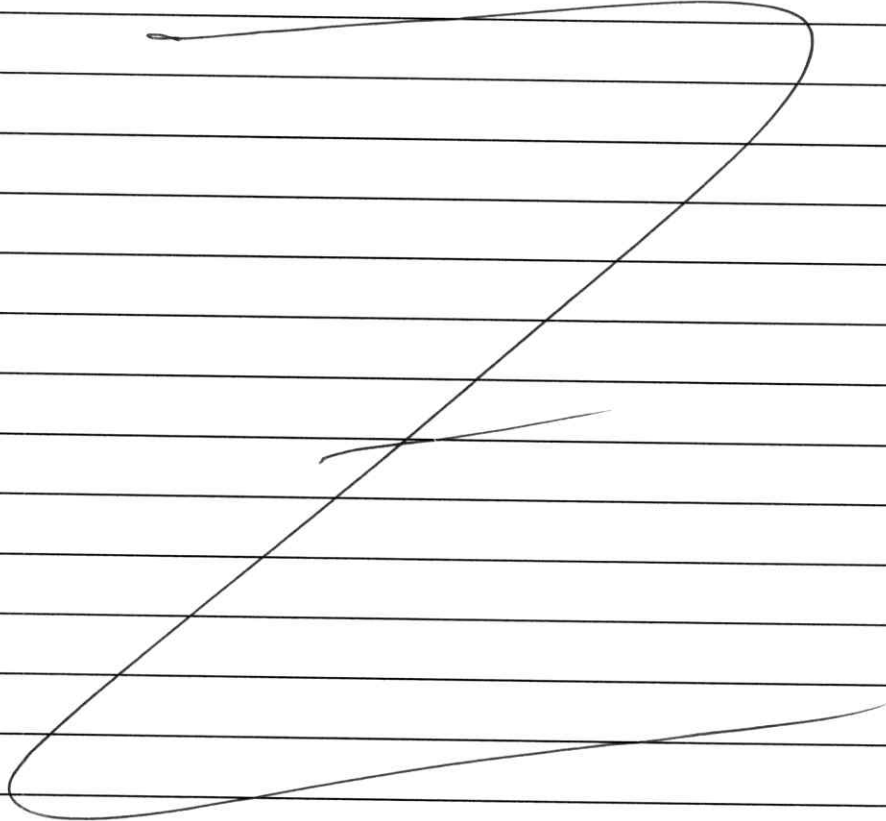

All in all, food problem has always existed in our lives and over the years it has only enlarged. However, if we take the bull by the horns and finally start to preserve the resources that we are having now as well as distribute food products wisely, this problem can be cleared out.

20	Title: Adele's life. I've chosen such a title, for in the text the author meticulously described Adele's story, while mentioning at the same time her traits of character, her illness, and her background as well. What's more, he also highlighted she is being well looked after and has a nurse that helps her with daily routine.
