The problem of food waste has been prominent for a long time. With the recent advancements in technology, basic resources have become abundant, however, wasting them can cause various economical and ecological issues, and in this essay I am going to explore this topic.

The main reason why waste food is most likely the fact that they do not plan their purchases ahead of time. As a result, they buy more than they need which leads to a good portion being ^{not} thrown away. Another factor that contributes to this problem is that some manufacturers sell their products in bulk. This creates a cycle of people buying too much and trashing the excess.

This issue can be mitigated by selling products in smaller portions while keeping the price per unit the same. Removing deals that encourage buying more, such as "buy two get one free" can also contribute to the reduction of food waste. These measures will ensure that even if the customer did not plan ahead of exactly how much food they need to buy, the chance of them purchasing more than necessary is shrunk significantly.

In conclusion, I believe that although the problem of food waste poses a considerable threat to economy and ecology, it is not unsolvable. Some measures will have to be taken, but they will ensure our prosperity in this field.

20	I think that a good title for this story would be "The long awaited return". I believe it suits the text because the main aspect of the plot is the wait for Mr. Baxter, which lasted at least a year with Mrs. Baxter, her daughter and Juan the coming to the station every day.
