ВАРИАНТ № 2

Food wastage is a serious problem which has to be addressed immediately. In order to resolve this issue, it is needed to understand its roots at first.

One of the reasons for people's wasting food is their increase in wealth. Money has spoilt people's attitude towards products, so now we are ready to throw away the whole portions, completely forgetting about our grandparents' sufferings due to food shortage during the wartime. Another reason for food wasting is the reluctance to stuff the kitchen with unnecessary things. Modern flats have too little space for extra, non-essential objects, so people have to get rid of some stuff.

When it comes to direct measures to reduce food wastage, one possible way-out is planning the shopping thoroughly. People should stick to their shopping list and avoid buying goods on impulse. This will help to decrease the number of unnecessary products at home. One more measure is forming a respectful attitude towards food. By spreading information about the depletion of natural resources or the sufferings of the people from the "Third World" countries, we will manage to foster appreciation towards food we currently have.

In conclusion, only with joint efforts will people be able to cope with the problem of food wastage.
