ВАРИАНТ № 1

It is without a doubt that in many countries malnourishment is a number-one problem the governments are left to tackle. According to many scientists, there are countless casualties suffering from such a hindrance with the lack of food which is negatively influencing not only people's physical health but also mental well-being. Hence, it begs the following question: How can humanity overcome it? (60)

First of all, there are the causes which should be considered. ~~First and foremost~~ I believe that excessive amounts of food which is too much in many cases account for such a problem as malnourishment. People need to be more rational and economic while distributing the amount of food they are going to spend on cooking or catering. Besides, the other reason, which ~~is in my opinion~~, also has a negative impact on the occurred situation, is that food ~~is sometimes being~~ distributed not in an equal way between the poor and the rich. It results in the poor not having enough food to eat and ~~results~~ in the rich having much food waste left. (20)

Second of all, the solutions are what - as many people put - on the horizon already. To solve the problem a few actions can be taken on.

For example, some governmental and non-governmental communities could be established to fight with food waste by cutting down on its amount. Also, a government of each country needs to consider their approach with to cater for its citizens' food needs. (47)

While the lack of food is the problem which has recently occurred, I am sure with thorough calculations and a few actions it can be easily tackled at short run. (34)
