We live in a world where consumerism rules. It's ^{already} a trend that we buy different items, use them one or twice and then throw them away. It's the same case with food. Nowadays, we ~~to~~ acquire tons of food, more than we need, and eat only those products that we desire the most. ~~The~~ The rest goes bad and, consequently, is thrown ~~to~~ out. At restaurants usually a lot of food is ordered, often more than the visitors can eat, which is why a lot ~~is~~ is left over. But a lot it's unhygienic to keep the leftovers and offer them to other people, so companies are forced to throw them away.

I believe that people ~~have~~ ^{waste} food as a habit. Many of our parents would lead such lifestyle and consequently we do too. Also, I think that there is a lack of ^{active} campaigning. If we would promote anti-wastage measures, we would've already lessened the amount of waste that is thrown away each year.

In my opinion, in order to reduce the wastage a few efforts should be made. Firstly, ~~of all~~, people should learn to buy only essential ~~thing~~ products in a reasonable amount. This will help lessen the numbers of kilograms wasted annually. Secondly, when going to restaurants we shouldn't order go all out and order everything that is on the menu.

We should only buy those dishes that we are capable of fully consuming. Furthermore, companies, grocery stores, shops and cafés should advise
you to only ~~get~~ get what you really need.
This can be done by hanging posters
~~on~~ in visible places. This way such organisations promote anti-wastage campaigns.

In conclusion, food waste has had negative consequences on our planet, which is why we should reduce the amount of ~~it~~ thrown away. Different measures can help reach this goal.

They didn't give up hope and never stopped believing in Mr. Baxter. They had faith and they knew that he would return to them.
